WHERE JUDICIAL, RELIGIOUS VIEWS 'INTERSECT' AND 'COLLIDE'

Harvard Law School professor Mark Tushnet recently examined an article co-written in 1998 by 7th Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Amy Coney Barrett, then a law clerk, about whether a judge's religious beliefs — Catholicism in this case — should prohibit him or her from reaching certain rulings. (Barrett's conclusion: Yes, for cases involving capital punishment.) Tushnet's analysis comes as Barrett is being floated as a potential successor to Anthony Kennedy on the U.S. Supreme Court.

IP FIRM PEROFF SAUNDERS OPENS CHICAGO OFFICE

Intellectual property attorneys Mark Peroff and Darren Saunders have formed a new law firm, Peroff Saunders P.C., with offices in Chicago, New York and New Jersey, according to a press release. The firm, which officially launched in mid-June, will be dedicated to trademark and other IP law. Peroff was previously managing partner of Wilson Keadjian Browndorf LLP's New York office, where Saunders was also a partner. Three additional WKB lawyers also joined the firm.

CHALLENGE TO PROPOSED 2020 CENSUS FORM ADVANCES

New York Attorney General Barbara D. Underwood on Wednesday said she is pleased with an order requiring the Trump administration to disclose how it decided to include a citizenship question on the 2020 census form. U.S. District Judge Jesse M. Furman in Manhattan issued the order in a lawsuit challenging the administration's "unconstitutional and arbitrary" decision to ask residents about their citizenship status. Underwood leads a coalition of officials from Illinois, Chicago and other states and cities who filed the suit.

ILLINOIS ECONOMY 'CHUGGING ALONG'

Consistently growing. Healthy for the foreseeable future. The lowest unemployment rate in 18 years. You're probably not used to hearing such descriptions about Illinois' economy, but that is currently the state of the state, according to University of Illinois economist J. Fred Giertz. Giertz, who has studied the state's economic health for decades, told public radio this week that Illinois is "chugging along at a pretty good pace," despite the unrest in local and national politics.
